Snow Day Monologue

NTI Day 5

You will read the below monologue that takes place during a snow day, then you will write your own snow day monologue. Use the example to help you format your own monologue, which could be about your thoughts and feelings during a snow day, or a character you create/imagine. You may use stage directions – as shown in the example in parenthesis to help your audience know where the story takes place or to describe action throughout.

Monologue from Snow Angel by David Lindsay-Abaire

(The blizzard rages on. The teens are trudging through mountains of snow on their way somewhere. Many have sleds. FRIDA stands by her bedroom window with her journal. She writes in it as the other teens continue to trudge and struggle in the snow.)

FRIDA: Idiots. I hate them. This is private property. I could tell my mother to call the police. They trudge through my backyard to get to the golf course because that’s where the best sledding hills are. And I live right next to the golf course. Sometimes, in the summer, we’ll be having a barbecue, and a golf ball will come flying into our back yard and land in the grill. Or the fruit salad. My cat was hit in the head once. It got a concussion. I hate golf. And I hate idiots who walk through my yard. And I hate writing in this journal. I don’t think it’s fair that we have to write when it’s a snow day.

Now it’s time to write your own monologue. It should be about half a page when written out or you may type it and send it to my email address: alison.fisher@scott.kyschools.us
